Students should receive six or more hours of hands-on time directly engaging in the art form (projects that include one-time make-and-take experiences are not eligible). The benefits of arts education are most fully realized when students engage with the arts consistently over time.

Projects will offer students opportunities to make creative choices and/or experiment within the parameters of the artistic discipline and/or medium. Students are encouraged to express themselves creatively as they participate in the arts.
- Outcome 3: Learning from Teaching Artists
Students receive instruction from teaching artists whose expertise in the art form is well demonstrated. Teaching artists also demonstrate proficiency as educators, bringing skills such as classroom management, arts learning assessment, and student engagement to their arts classrooms.
